The Complete Poetry of James Hearst

James Hearst

a The Complete Poetry of James Hearst part of the regionalist move that integrated furnish Wood, Paul Engle, Hamlin Garland, and Jay G. Sigmund, James Hearst helped create what Iowa novelist Ruth Suckow referred to as "a poetry of place". A lifelong Iowa farmer, Hearst started writing poetry at age nineteen and at last wrote 13 books of poems, a novel, brief stories, cantatas, and essays, which won him a faithful following. Lots of his poems have been released within the regionalist periodicals of the time, together with the Midland, and through the nice local presses, together with Carroll Coleman's Prairie Press. Drawing on his stories as a farmer, Hearst wrote with a unique voice of rural lifestyles and its joys and conflicts, of his personal battles with actual and emotional soreness (he was once in part paralyzed in a farm accident), and of his personal position within the world. His transparent eye provided a imaginative and prescient of the midwestern agrarian existence that was once sympathetic yet no longer sentimental -- a humans and an artwork rooted in place.
