The Final Station: Umschlagplatz by Jarosław Marek Rymkiewicz

Jarosław Marek Rymkiewicz

the ultimate Station files Jaroslaw Rymkiewicz's obsession, as a Christian Pole, with the extermination of the Jews in the course of international struggle prior to the eyes of the Poles and, often, with their collaboration. Rymkiewicz areas the Umschlagplatz - the world of the Warsaw ghetto the place Jews have been amassed for deportation as a part of the ultimate resolution - on the middle of his narrative, simply because "it occurred correct here, in the middle of our lives." Juxtaposing the earlier and the present, the non-public and the historical, the ultimate Station features a reconstruction of the minutest information of genocide (very very like Claude Lanzmann's Shoah) and a fictional account of an I. B. Singer-like summer season at a hotel close to Warsaw the place a bunch of Jewish and Christian neighbors meet presently earlier than the conflict for a final season of tennis, debating, and romance. during this relentlessly probing narrative, Rymkiewicz examines for the 1st time in all its complexity the Poles' courting to the Holocaust.
